Joellen Jarrett has a Bachelor of Arts degree in psychology and a Master of Science degree in Management. She has over 15-years of experience working in the federal, human capital, arena and additional experience working in federal, private and non-profit environments. Her background includes work with the Department of Defense, as a Russian linguist and intelligence analyst early in her federal career. Most recently, she has concentrated her energy in the area of human capital, in workforce and organizational development. She is currently enjoying her "second tour" with DOE, working in the areas of learning strategy and policy and leading a Department-wide, competency management initiative. In her spare time, Ms. Jarrett also serves as an adjunct faculty member with The Graduate School, in Washington, D.C.

"I worked alot of special projects around work life balance, the balanced scorecard, and the President's Management Agenda during the first tour. This time I am working in the areas of competency development, policy, and organizational effectiveness - the fact that I liked the organization enough to return speaks volumes. It's one of only a few federal organizations to which I readily refer college students - great mission & cutting edge work in the areas of science and engineering! I love working in Human Capital because of its importance to helping the Department accomplish its mission. An organization is truly only as good as it's weakest person - it takes sound Human Capital strategy, policies, programs, and procedures to make sure we recruit, hire, train, and retain the best and the brightest of today's workforce."
